Project Unveil: A project that empowers the children from low-income families. The project was launched at the 7th Annual Camp held at Liffordrite International School, Apetie, Ibadan. The Chief Executive Officer of the organization, Mr. O. O. Okwumigh, a student at Harvard University, United States of America, and a chair of this interview, with Ola-Oluwa Mimiola, discussed the rationale behind the establishment of the camp, among other issues. Extracts:

"The children were helping each other to exist. So, they thought that they were saving money. Meanwhile, the lucky 93 children had a wonderful time in the one-week camp. We fed them with good food; clothed them, protected them, trained them, and also gave them pocket money, in case they had nothing to buy. We are very often, and the information that they got would change their lives for the best. How did the children respond to the project? Oh! The children were so elated, having a rare opportunity to see the other side of life, and experience the life of a child born with silver spoon in his mouth. Many of them wished the camp did not finish. You could hear them saying, "Aunty, we don't want to go again." And when you talk about their realization now, it is superb and progressive. One of those things, that they learnt and embraced was the confidence they had built that they could become anything they wanted to become in life, in spite of their background. A lot of them were drawn out when they came in, but now they are full of life and hope for brighter future. They were fully of the pool in human trafficking and prostitution among other vices. They see now that education is the greatest engine of personal development, which unlocks their destinies. They learnt about table manners, performing, and knowing how to comport themselves and some other etiquettes. How did you raise the money to forge the project? This was a big challenge, as we all know the time of the economy in the country presently. So, we partnered with a private school in Ibadan, Liffordrite International School, and other meaningful individuals who have made it and were really to give back to the society. What are the challenges to face?"
